Where Is the Judge?

When Is a Drug Store a Blind Pig and When Is a Blind Pig Operator or Druggist?

Among those who have been selling liquor in Campbell, two have answered the call of the Court and paid their fine of $100 each. The first, F. B. Olmstead, conducts a place of business known as the "Campbell Drug Store," at the corner of Campbell avenue and First street. While Mr. Olmstead is not a pharmacist and does not prepare prescriptions, he keeps drugs, medicines and other articles usually found at a drugstore. The store has also been handly liquor and selling it under certain conditions, which are explained by Mr. Olmstead in the article below. Otherwise the gentleman has been a worthy member of the community and his placed of business a valued asset of the town. When he learned that he had been violating the law immediately, before a warrant had been served, went to the district attorney's office and then to Judge Wallace in his private office, explained the situation, pleaded guilty and paid his fine. According to the statement of Mr. Olmstead there was no one else in the room. The next morning there appeared in the Mercury a thirteen-inch article, at the top of the column with a double head, which had the appearance of being either written or dictated by the Judge himself.

The second man, G. Ranger, conducts a joint on a side street across the railroad which has been a disgrace to this community for years. He was arrested and taken before the same judge and entered a plea "not guilty." Trial was set for Nov. 14th and Ranger was released on $500 bail. He retained an ex-assistant district attorney to represent him at the trial. On the 14th the trial did not occur but was continued one week (possibly to give the defendant a chance to change his plea). When the trial finally came up Mr. Ranger pleaded guilty and paid a fine of $100. The next morning the Mercury had a six-line notice of the event, without comment, except that the convicted man was dignified with the name "druggist."

The query is, why should the judge give so much publicity to the innocent offender, who without question is a highly respected citizen of the community, and have so little to say about the other individual who contributes nothing but harmful influences to the community?

Mr. Olmstead Explains

Editor Mercury-Herald: In view of current rumors, the present manager of the "Campbell Drug Store" wishes to make a final statement.

Regardless of all newspaper articles or floating speeches to the contrary, the facts of the case are these:

First—No spirits of any kind have ever come to the store during the present management in even as large a quantity as five gallons at a time.

Second—I have never sold liquor to boys or minors except in one instance, when a young man perjured himself, saying he was 21 years of age, and that he was getting it for medicine for his father. He later returned with his purchase of six ounces and a guilty conscience, admitting his false statement.

Third—The greatest care has always been used when to whomsoever sold to ascertain said article was to be used for medicinal purposes or not.

Fourth—As soon as I learned that a warrant was out for arrest I went voluntarily by myself to the District Attorney and the Judge, pleaded guilty in innocently breaking the law, as it was supposed a Federal license permitted the selling as above indicated, with the result already known.

If selling spirits in the manner mentioned constitutes a "Blind Pig," as has been stated by the Interurban Press, it is news to us.

F. B. OLMSTEAD.

[The Press never accused the above gentleman of operating a "blind pig" but merely stated that the store "has been called a 'blind pig'," and we have heard the reference not once but many times.—Editor Press.]

Juniors "Feed" Seniors

Jolly Time at Assembly Hall last Friday Night as Result of Contest in Debate—Forensic Bout with Palo Alto Postponed

The Seniors were royally entertained last Friday evening at the High School by the Juniors at a "feed." The menu consisted of salads, salted crackers, pickles, olives, sandwiches, tamales, cocoa and cake. The tables, which were set in the typewriting room, were very artistically decorated with fern and holly berries. Professor Snow acted as toastmaster and many toasts were cleverly responded to. Of the faculity present present besides Mr. Snow were Miss Catton and Miss Sykes. After supper music and games inside and out were enjoyed. This feed was given to the Seniors as a result of a debate between the two classes a couple of weeks ago.

The debate with Palo Alto which was scheduled for the second of December has been postponed until the ninth or sixteenth on account of teachers' institute next week. This postponement is quite fortunate as it gives the team more time to work up the debate.

New Views from Foreign Fields

Last Sunday evnning at the Congregational church the pastor, the Rev. G. E. Atkinson, gave the eleventh in a series of lectures illustrated with the stereopticon. His subject was "The Healing of the Nations, or the Work of the American Doctors." He displayed seventy-two slides just received from Boston and used for the first time on this coast. They represented scenes from Albania, Philippine Islands, Turkey, India, China, and Africa. Three pictures of special interest were, one of Dr. H. H. Atkinson's hospital, taken at the time of dedication in the presence of the civil, military and religious leaders of that district; another was the picture of Dr. Susan B. Talmon, of China, who is being supported by the First Congregational church of San Jose; she was a classmate of Rev. Atkinson at Iowa College. The third picture was one showing the great need of the work in China; it being a view of the "Baby Tower" where abandoned children were placed to die. Another view showed Dr. Van Allen's Hospital at Madura, India, which was built at a cost of $10,000 and every cent was given by non-Christian Hindus. A large crowd filled the church.

Decided ... Who ...uldn't Work Was "One of New Investigating Commissions."

A tramp slept in the barn of a farm near Raritan a few nights ago, and in the morning presented himself at the house for breakfast. The family gazed at him in astonishment, for such hair as his had never been seen in that farming community. It was as thick as it was long, and it came to his shoulders. It stood out aggressively, as did his untrimmed whiskers.

On top of his head was a small derby hat, incongruous in size and shape. After he had eaten heartily of oatmeal and cream and ham and eggs, the farmer got up courage to ask him if he would work, as he was short-handed for the threshing that day.

"I am forbidden," loftily replied he of the redundant locks.

"Who forbade you?" demanded the farmer.

"The government," solemnly affirmed the tramp.

"The government's a durned sight too paternal," roared the farmer after the retreating figure. "And I'd like to know where reciprocity comes in," he added. "There goes my food and I get nothing for it."

Later in the day, when he learned that the tramp had gone to the next farm and claimed a second breakfast, he was still more enraged. "I suppose the government told him to eat at every farm—threshing time, too—and never do a lick of work. Say, I bet he's one of them investigatin' commissions. They never do any real work. That's what he is!"—New York Herald.

Donjon de Vincennes Restored.

The famous Donjon de de Vincennes, which has played no small part in the history of Paris, is shortly to be opened to the public. This wonder of mediaeval architecture—it is a stone edifice, dating almost entirely from the early fourteenth century—has for many years been little better than a military barracks, but, thanks to the society which calls himself "Amis de Vincennes," the military authoritines have consented to give up the chateau, with its chapel, towers, and remarkable walls. The five floors of the donjon are now being freed of the old military fitting, harnesses, and old arms which encumbered them, and the magnificent stairway, the prisons, council chamber, inquisition chamber, and apartment of Charles V. are being restored to their former condition. It is not proposed to turn the donjon into any sort of museum, but simply to leave it free to public inspection as one of the most remarkable architectural monuments to be found near Paris.—Paris Correspondent London Globe.

Salt on French Roads.

As a general rule the roads in and around French towns are tarred at the commencement of the summer in order to abate the dust nuisance. It has, however, been found that tar, although excellent in the case of macadamized roads, is of little or no value where car lines exist and paved street crossings intersect the roads in every direction, as tarring cannot be carried out on stones.

The authorities, basing their action on the well-known hygrometrical properties of common salt, have made a test of its value in laying the dust. Twenty yards of roadway have been sprinkled liberally with salt and then watered freely. If the results are satisfactory, salt will be used throughout the town of Havre, it being impossible to tar the majority of the streets as they are paved with rough stone blocks.—From Consular and Trade Reports.

Cook Book Photography.

"Buying meat with the help of pictures is the latest fad," said a butcher. "I'd give a dollar to know who started it. I'd like to send him to jail. Every cook book prints pictures showing just how the different cuts of meat ought to look, and the housekeepers who are green at buying bring them along to go by.

"Such people are enough to drive you crazy. They look first at the pictures, then at the meat. They say I must be trying to cheat them because the piece of beef I call sirloin looks more like the picture of a rump steak. Just as if I cut up meat every time according to cookbook photographs. My only consolation is that the women seem to have as much trouble over it as I do, so I am hoping they will soon get tired."

...AKE MONEY W... ...ENS

...wever, One Must ... and Every Requirement to Get ... Out of Flock—Start With Few.

Success or failure with chickens rests with the operator alone, writes C. N. Whittaker of Lawrence, Mich., in the Chicago Daily News. To get the most out of his hens one must understand and be ready to meet their every requirement. He must be able to keep them in first-class physical condition, he must know just how much to feed and the kind of food that constitutes the best ration. Nothing can be left to chance or guesswork. Ignorance or indolence means failure.

There is good money in poultry and Chicago is a good market. Last year our Rhode Island Red hens cost us about $1.20 each for feed, and the return from them was a little less than $3 each. This is not a small farm flock, as we keep several hundred, and even now when they are all yarded to keep them out of a crop of buckwheat, growing on their range, and are in the middle of the molting season, they are paying a profit of 8 to 10 cents each a month.

A man came to Michigan about a year ago. His ignorance was colossal, his conceit stupendous. He had read "systems" until he exuded portions of them at every pore, and his plans were all made before he put a foot on his farm. He said he was going to make us sit up and take notice. He did. Owing to the improper ventilation of his poultry house he lost half his hens during the winter, and he did not get to exceed two dozen eggs through November, December and January. About the middle of August his son said: "We got an egg yesterday, the first one we have had in over two months." Success with chickens under such conditions is impossible.

There is certainly money in poultry, but to get it out a man must be willing to learn the things he does not know. The best way to do this is to start with a few fowls and let the number increase with his experience.

FEW LITTLE ORCHARD HELPS

Trees Respond to Application of Manure as Quickly as Any Other Crop—Better Plowed Under.

When the mercury hovers around the small figures and the snow is on the ground, there is a job waiting for you.

Haul a little manure into the orchard. And little, as used in this connection, means a good deal. For an orchard twelve or fifteen years planted, a two-horse wagon load will not be too much for two trees. Trees respond to the application of manure as quickly as any other crop. And anything which increases the vigor and health of the trees adds to their ability to produce fruit.

For young orchards upon rich prairie soil, manure is not advised, but after ten years of growth, the soil needs reinforcement. It was formerly taught as a cardinal principle that a new tree should never be planted where an old one has been removed. But practical men no longer regard this view. They make the old spot rich with fertilizers and plant the trees there just the same. And the tree blooms just as well as any well-planted tree should.

Successful fruit men do not pasture their orchards, neither do they cut and remove crops of hay. Everything which grows upon the surface is returned to the soil.

In the application of manure never pile it about the body of the tree, but spread it out over a surface as large as the spread of the tops. In many cases this will mean covering the whole surface. If you can plow it under when spring comes, that is better. But if you cannot do this, much of the nutriment will get down to the roots, through the medium of the spring rains.

If your fruit is poor and small, it is not fair to lay it to the depravity of the tree, or the insects every time, for often it is the lack of fertility which causes failure. Help the tree to do its work by feeding it liberally.

Phosphate Rock.

Phosphate rock is the great American fertilizer. It is about the only natural raw material that has yet been found in great quantities in this country, and its abundance has led to rapid development of the mines, leading to a production of 2,655,000 long tons in the past year. The average price during the year declined from $4.62 to $4.11 per ton. Most of the deposits are in the south, but there is a great deal of phosphate land in the west. An effort is being made to encourage the use of raw phosphate rock, finely ground. It is claimed that this material, low price considered, is superior to the acid phosphate, because, although it acts more slowly, the effect is more lasting. Experiments indicate that the raw rock will be found adapted to such uses as top dressing and mowing lands and for use in orchards and vineyards, also for general improvement of poor soils.

Favorite Cholera Cure.

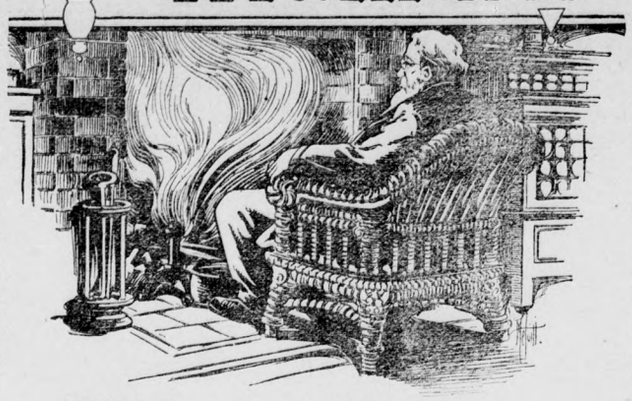
A favorite cholera cure in the west is made as follows: Red pepper, two ounces; powdered asafoetida, two ounces; carbonate of iron, four ounces; powdered rhubarb, one ounce; Spanish brown, six ounces; sulphur, two ounces. The mixture is made into pellets with flour and water and given three times a day. The mixed powder is added to the soft food as a preventive, giving a tablespoonful twice a week to every two dozen fowls.

Calves and Cows.

If you want to make a veritable milk-producing machine of a cow and have her worry as little as possible never permit her to "mother" her calf. Take it away from her as soon as possible, for if she has time to become strongly attached to it she is sure to worry when it is finally taken away from her. If the first two or three calves are thus removed the maternal instinct is likely to become largely dormant, and she will come to consider a pail rather than a calf as the natural channel for her milk.

THANKSGIVING RECOLLECTIONS

By EDWARD CHAPMAN

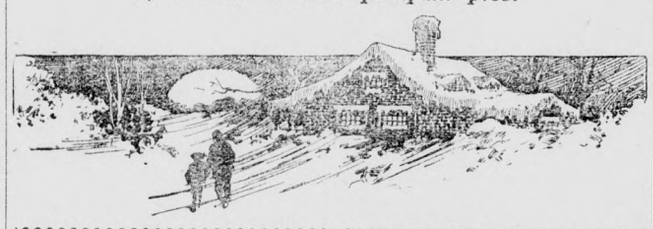


When the winds of bleak November
Down the chimney moan and sigh,
Stirring into life each ember
Till the flames roar fierce and high
Then my thoughts revert to boyhood,
When Thanksgiving Day drew nigh.

In the flames I see the farmhouse,
And the woodland brown and sere
Where the sportsman's rifle echoed
As that day of days drew near.
Scenes which ever shall be cherished
In the burning logs appear.

I can see the deep old cellar
Where the apple bins, piled high,
Overshadowed heaps of pumpkins
Golden as the sunset sky,
And the casks of new fall cider
Stood along the wall close by.

As the old-time scenes are fading
While the fire slowly dies,
Visions of a groaning table
Are presented to my eyes,
And I almost scent the fragrance
Of the mince and pumpkin pies.



KEEPING THE FEAST

TRUE MEANING OF LESSON OF THANKSGIVING.

Should Be Time of Rejoicing for All, Those Who Have Abundance Sharing With Their Less Fortunate Brethren.

The sober joyfulness of the first New England Thanksgiving did not exhaust itself in a single day. Governor Bradford after the first scanty harvest made deliberate provision for three days' feasting and rejoicing, during which the infant colony entertained more than its own number of visiting Indians. It is true that these guests contributed venison for the feast, as they had earlier contributed corn for the use of the colony, but the heart of the feast was in the hospitality which made them welcome.

It would be hard to imagine a greater contrast than that which must have existed between the sober garb and quiet manners of the Pilgrims, schooled in persecution and privation, and the fanatic dress and unrestrained impulses of Massasoit and his people. The Indian could be dignified enough upon occasion, but his uncareful self-indulgence even more than the colonists' hospitable unbending was the sign of an unusual confidence. That mutual confidence and good understanding, to the continuance of which these days of thaksgiving and feasting evidently contributed not a little, procured those necessary years of peace and security which enabled the weakness of the Pilgrim colony to harden into strength.

We call Thanksgiving day especially a home festival, and its associations are most delightful in family reunions and home pleasures. Yet the precedent of Plymouth hospitality has never been and never ought to be neglected. It is a time when those who are blessed with home joys take pleasure in sharing them with the homeless. Families enlarge themselves to include not only the scattered next of kin, but those also who are far from their own home circle. A touch of the blessed spirit of home joy and mutual helpfulness stretches beyond the limits of the family to include those for whom the day would otherwise be lonelier than others days for privation of home companionships.

This gracious hospitality of the Thanksgiving season brings home memories to many guests. It ought to have its teachings for many others—young men and women in our towns who dream of homes yet to be earned or realized—in keeping them in touch with the true home spirit. There is no selfishness in true home love. It is not merely as a refuge for ourselves that we build the walls and lay the hearth and kindle the fire and spread the table. To gain a home and make it beautiful is the dream of many of these homeless ones. To make home ministrant and hospitable and so to crown it with a higher beauty ought to be the suggestion of the happy feasting and followship of Thanksgiving.

The community was the host in that first Plymouth festival, yet the community divided into families. As they kept the feast in the large family groups into which the necessity of house building and defense had up to this time divided them, did any of them think, we wonder, of the law of the passover established for other exiles and pilgrims so many centuries before: "And if the household be too little for the lamb, let him and his neighbor next unto his house take it according to the number of the souls"?

As a community we are today much further from absolute want and peril of starvation than the Pilgrims were when they began the custom of the yearly feast of thanksgiving. Yet there are many of our people who, if they keep the feast, must keep it in the midst of poverty and peril of want. In the widst of greater want and peril the forefathers invited strangers to the feast, providing what they could. They were wholly free from that false pride, so common nowadays, which thinks most of appearances and is ashamed to offer hospitality unless it is possible, also, to make a show of wealth. Out of what they had the fathers gave God thanks and entertained the strangers at their gates. The other spirit of false pride and shame robs both guest and host of the best joy of the Thanksgiving time—the joy of common faith in the Giver of all good, and of cordial welcome which has nothing to conceal and nothing to assert. This simplicity of welcome, this quietness of a cheerful spirit, must ever be more grateful to the guest than formal show of multiplied courses and elaborate adornment of the table.

Hymn of Praise

We hold our hands to Thee, O Lord of Hosts!
And praise Thee for Thy blessings manifold.
We thank Thee for the bounteous harvest yield,
The garnered opulence of vine and field,
The work of man with full fruition crowned.

We thank Thee that we live with souls attuned
To all the beauty of the pulsing world.
We thank Thee for the heroes of the quiet ways,
When no man knoweth, but who live thy praise,
The silent heroes in the ways forgot.
We praise Thee that no brother lives enslaved,
Free hearts, free homes! aye, let thanksgiving rise,
The end of strife—the soldier's duty done;
The rich reward—the joys of freedom won.
Thank God! ye people for the gift of peace.

...Purpose—to Suit Customers.

Use a fine-grained, clean and easy dissolving salt. Coarse salt is slow to dissolve, and is apt to cut the grain. Use a hair sieve, thereby avoiding lumps and uneven salting. Streaked and mottled butter is caused by improper salting. In testing salt measure off equal quantities to an equal quantity of water, and the salt most quickly dissolved and giving the clearest brine is the salt to use. Salt butter to suit your customers. If the butter is for market, three-quarters of an ounce to the pound is the proper quantity to use. If the butter is to be packed for winter, use one ounce to the pound. Some dairymen salt in the churn. If this method is followed, use one ounce to the pound. In working, whether washing the butter or not, be careful to work the moisture well off before salting. This will save salt, save the grain and insure a better body. Use a butter-worker; the salt can be better worked in. After salting and working, set the butter in the dairy for a few hours, so the salt can be completely dissolved; then rework and print. The butter should be weighed before salting. One rounding tablespoonful of fine salt equals one ounce.

The V-shaped lever butter-worker, made of hard oak wood, is the best one for the farm dairy. It is well made, and the butter can be quickly worked. Make up in half-pound prints, wrap in good parchment paper, which has been previously wet in clear, cold water.

Be sure to have the exact weight of butter in each print. The careful butter dairymen, who supply the best and highest price trade, have the name of farm and the weight of butter neatly printed on each print. This in time becomes of value to the dairyman. Butter kept a week or ten days in a dry cellar will shrink slightly in weight, and will bring the salt to the surface. A slight allowance must always be made for evaporation.

INCREASE IN YIELD OF CORN

Interesting Experiments Conducted by Ohio Experiment Station With Use of Manure.

"At the Ohio state experiment station," says Director Charles A. Thorne, "we for five years conducted an experiment in the use of cow manure in the production of corn, wheat and clover grown in rotation.

"The result of this test is that in the five year average we have produced an increase of about two bushels of corn, two-thirds of a bushel of wheat and about 60 pounds of clover hay for each ton of manure, when the manure has been taken from an ordinary open barn yard.

"The total increase was worth $1.50 if we value corn at one-third of a dollar per bushel, wheat at two-thirds of a dollar, clover hay at one-third of a dollar per 100 pounds, corn stover at $3 per ton and straw at $2.

"When, however, we leave this manure in the stable to be trampled under foot till ready for use the increase has been worth $2.50 per ton of manure; and when to this straw manure we have added as made about 40 pounds of phosphatic rock to each ton of manure for the purpose not only of preventing the escape of ammonia but of reinforcing the manure with phosphoric acid we have realized a total value of $3.25 per ton of manure, after paying for the phosphate used.

"The manure treated in this manner produced an average increase of three bushels of corn, one and three-quarters of wheat and 125 pounds of hay for each ton of manure."

Bacteria in Milk.

The souring of milk, as well as the ripening of cream and cheese, is due to the bacteria in it, and without bacteria these, including other changes, would not take place. The number of bacteria present in freshly drawn milk varies enormously with the conditions of milking, however, and as dirty and careless handling causes them to multiply immensely, it is of the utmost importance that cleanliness be observed in all matters pertaining to the milking and marketing of milk and keeping it in the home; the more so because it is an easy matter for milk to become contaminoted with disease germs, and thereby spread typhoid, diphtheria, scarlet fever and tuberculosis. Aside from cleanliness, the problem of keeping milk sweet is one of checking the growth of the bacteria; and as they are inactive at a temperature below 50 degrees Fahrenheit, milk to be used should always be kept in a cool clean place.

Selecting Hens.

There is only one way to build up a heavy laying strain, and that is to select hens that are good layers and, if possible, that come from a line of good layers, and to them a male bird that is known to be the "son" of a good layer. This work is possible only by the use of trap nests.

While Milking.

There is no sense in tying a cow's tail down while you milk, for if you will put on a fly repellant or cover her with a blanket of old bagging she will keep still.

Cows need to be milked with dry hands and only after the udders have been washed or brushed clean.

A good way to "entertain" a young heifer when breaking her to be milked is to place before her a pail or box containing a quart of bran and middlings mixed together. This will keep her busy and good-natured better than anything else that can be done.

Cleaning Greasy Pans.

Squares of medium grained sandpaper kept over the sink will be found useful for cleaning skillets or pans that are greasy, blackened or rusty and is often better than scouring powder. Try it.

Grading Apples.

When the apple crop is ready grade it carefully, pick according to the demands of your market, whether in barrels or boxes, and always in clean ...

Miss Leonard's Heathen

By KATE CLEEVES

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

May Leonard's brother Robert met her at Manila when the long ocean voyage was ended and took her at once to a hotel.

"After you've had one good night's rest ashore you will feel more like tackling this cross-country ride to Pambuan," said Robert as they ate their dinner.

"It sounds fascinating," said May, her bright eyes drinking in the strange sights about her. "Is the country unprotected? Is there any danger now?"

"Not a particle," assured her brother. "The route we are going is a main road, well traveled, and picketed along its length. It will only take us five hours to ride down to my place, but I knew you would be too weary to start this afternoon. Now, tell me all about the folks at home."

May proceeded to do so at such length that it was very late when they separated for the night and it seemed that her head had scarcely touched its pillow before Robert was calling her to get up and start on their ride before the heat of the day.

Robert Leonard looked at his sister's shining gray eyes and the wisps of brown hair blowing against her pink cheeks and he felt a thrill of pride in her. Wait until his partner, Arthur Scoville, saw her!

By the time Robert had his sister married to Arthur Scoville, May had marveled at his long and gloomy silence.

"What's the matter, Bobby?" she asked cheerily.

He brightened up at once, chiding himself for spoiling a glorious ride by unwarranted fears. "How is the parson getting along?" he asked.

May Leonard blushed under his scrutiny. The "parson" was the pastor of the church in which May was an earnest worker and the young divine had devoted himself ardently to winning the heart of his fair parishioner, so that everybody expected wedding bells to chime when May returned from this year's visit to her brother.

"Are You a Christian?"

"How's the parson?" he repeated teasingly, instantly forgetting all about Arthur Scoville.

"Very well," said May seriously. "Oh, Robert, he came to see me the night before I sailed and he impressed it upon me that in coming out here to this unenlightened country I was given an unusual opportunity to do God's work. He said he could see God's hand in it."

"How?" asked Robert shortly.

"Oh—he said I must lost no opportunity to forward the great cause of Christianity—and I—believe I promised him—but I am afraid!"

"Promised him—not to marry him?" roared Robert.

"Dear me, no!" cried May. "I had to tell him that long ago. We are simply friends—and he is my pastor, you know."

Robert nodded grimly. "What did he ask you to promise?"

"That I would lose no opportunity to push forward the good work. That I would address every man, woman and child that came my way and ask them—if they were Christians and all that—but somehow I don't think he really knew just how embarrassing it might be, for some of the natives here look so intelligent, and it's awfully hard to tell them apart from the foreigners."

"There are missions here," observed Robert.

"I know it. Mr. Nash said I could have such fine opportunities going down into a new country, away from the missions. He said I could be a sort of a scout, and when I had found a sufficient number of heathern here I could notify the mission and they would send some workers down."

"He must have thought you were coming out to work instead of play," growled Robert.

"I suppose he thought I wanted to help all I could—he is very good, Robert, but I'm afraid I must be very wicked, for I don't really want to address strangers on such a personal topic."

In the distance Robert Leonard saw his houses against the dark background of the forest, from which his laborers were bringing out a fortune in dye-woods. Close at hand was a patch of sugar cane growing alongside the road and standing among the green canes was a man with a curved knife in his hand, cutting down succulent stalks.

May pulled her horse to a standstill and looked back at her brother, who was lagging behind. "Bobby, I believe I'll begin with him!" she said, pointing toward the man, who, apparently unconscious of their approach, was swinging away at the sugar cane, whistling as he worked.

"Fire ahead," said Bobby, stifling a laugh. "I'll wait in the shade of this tree. But why not confine yourself to converting the women and children and let the men alone?"

She rode close beside him and explained. "I told Mr. Nash how repugnant it would be for me and he said that was all the more reason I should do it; I must sacrifice my feelings to the principle of the thing."

"Well, go on," said Bobby resignedly, although a wicked light shone in his eyes. He did not like Mr. Nash and he did love his pretty sister.

The man in the cane field did not look up until May's white linen gown flashed in the sunlight. Then he gazed at her, startled, and whipped off his hat; surprise seemed to seal his lips, for she was a bonny sight

May leaned from the saddle and took courage. "My good man," she began softly, "are you a Christian?"

A startled look leaped to the man's eyes and then he said ever so gently and courteously, "I hope so, madam."

"I am so glad," cried May with relief. "I hope you will pardon my asking you—only I promised my pastor out home that I would do all I could to convert the—the—er—er—" she paused in confusion.

"Heathen?" he smiled up at her. "Well, if one is going to sift the wheat from the chaff it must all be winnowed. Pray don't distress yourself, madam, I have often been addressed by missionaries."

"That's such a relief," sighed May. "Good-by."

"Good-by," he said, and when she turned her horse once more into the road he bent over his work and relieved her of any embarrassment she might have felt afterward.

"It wasn't so awfully hard, Bobby," she assured her brother as they rode on. "If all of them were as courteous as that man—. Why, dear, is this your place?" as he got down and opened a wide gate.

"This is Woodland—welcome to my home, honey," smiled Robert as they cantered up to the wide veranda of the bungalow.

"Where is Mr. Scoville, your partner?" went on May, as she stood in the sunlight.

"Here he comes now," said Robert in a stifled tone.

"Where?"

"Through the same gate that we entered—he's been taking his morning exercise in the anefield." Then Bobby Leonard did not dare look at his sister.

"You knew who he was all the time, Bob Leonard?" she demanded with rose-red cheeks and flashing eyes.

"Yes, dear—you had to have your lesson, May, and it better be with a gentleman like Scoville than some impertinent stranger who can talk back at you in some language you do not understand," apologized and explained Robert.

Arthur Scoville came up to the veranda and was presented to May Leonard. Not once by look or sign did he give evidence that he had seen her before, and his tact in passing over this embarrassing period was the beginning of May Leonard's falling in love with him.

They did fall in love with each other, those two, and it was only their promise to stand by Robert and the dye-wood industry until its successful termination that prevented that clever young American from weeping audibly.

Initials of Alexander Pope.

Enemy Declared by Adding E to Them You Had His Character—Change in Writer's Name.

Alexander Pope was a victim of his initials. After the publication of the "Dunciad," one of the poet's enemies, who had suffered a severe trouncing in the satire declared that if you took the initial letters of Pope's name and added the final letter of his surname you had his character.

The "jest" caught on, and in 1728 appeared a pamphlet entitled "Pope Alexander's Supremacy and Infallibility Examined." The frontispiece to this now forgotten pasquinade represented Pope in the form of an ape, with his head resting on his hand, and his elbow placed upon a pile of his own works.

No modern writer is better known by his initials than Robert Louis Stevenson, but "R. L. S." was arrived at after considerable experiment. Stevenson's baptismal names were Robert Lewis Balfour, and the third name caused the difficulty.

Until he was about fifteen he signed himself "R. Stevenson." After that he occasionally used Stevenson, "R. L. B." In 1868 he asked his mother to address him as "Robert Lewis"; but a year or two later, as he expressed it in a letter to Mr. Baxter, "fater several years of feeble and ineffectual endeavor with regard to my third initial (a thing I loathe)" he finally abandoned it altogether.

Stevenson when about eighteen changed the spelling of his second name from "Lewis" to "Louis," but Lewis he remained at all times in the mouth of his family and friends.

The Harder Task.

Senator Root, at a luncheon at the Washington Country Club, said of war:

"Our arbitration treaties come none too soon. The world is getting tired of war. This fact was well brought home to me the other day by the remark of an English diplomat.

"He said that at the end of the Boer war, two Unionists were wrangling at a dinner.

"'I,' said the first Unionist, a lieutenant of volunteers—'I went to the war and defended my country.'

"'Pshaw, what of that?' the other retorted. 'I stayed in my country and defended the war.'"

An Accepted Apology.

There lives in Minneapolis a German printer who is well educated, but whose ignorance of the English language as it is spoken is great. On one occasion a reporter wrote a story for his newspaper, making fun of the German, and, incidentally, making the German angry. The printer sought out the writer and expressed his wrath.

"Yes, I wrote that," said the reporter, "and I reiterate all I said."

"Well," commented the German, smilingly, "I'm glad you 'pologize."—Popular Magazine.

Not Hard to Believe.

A certain lady called up her grocer by telephone the other morning and, after she had sufficiently scolded the man who responded, said:

"It probably will, madam," said the voice at the other end of the wire; "you are talking to an undertaker."—Tit Bits.

THE COST OF MILITARISM
$95,000,000 ANNUALLY

Expense of Navy is Over One Hundred and Fifty-one Millions

For the eight years preceding the war with Spain our average annual expenditure for the army was less than $24,000,000; for the eight years following the war the annual average leaped to more than $83,000,000; and now for the current year the army appropriation is $95,440,567. The navy has done even better. For the eight years preceding the Spanish war the average annual expenditure was a little more than $27,500,000; for the next eight years it averaged $102,400,000, and this year the navy gets $131,350,854. Adding the navy and army appropriations gives the sum of $226,791,421, which is rather a neat price to pay for imitating the antics of those ghost dancers on the farther side of the Atlantic. But that isn't all by any means. To this sum must be added the current appropriation for the military academy, $1,856,249; the appropriation for forts and fortifications, $5,617,200; and the pension appropriation of $155,758,000, making a grand total of $390,022,870 as the cost of militarism for one year, or at the rate of $1,068,555 a day for every day in the year.—Technical World Magazine.

EASTERN APPLE ORCHARDS
GREATLY ON THE IMPROVE

Much Merchantable Fruit in Sight for Storage and Winter Markets.

"Apple orchards are in better shape this fall than for some time past," says the American Agriculturist, "with more merchantable fruit in sight for storage and winter markets and reasonably good prices prevailing. Summarizing the returns from investigations made by the journal above quoted, the 1911 crop of apples is placed at 30,000,000 barrels, or 20 per cent larger than that of 1910 or 1909. The total just named is by no means a bumper crop, however. New York's yield this year is 5,220,000 barrels, against 3,600,000 in 1910; Pennsylvania, 3,200,000 barrels, against 2,000,000 last year; Ohio, 2,400,000 barrels, against 1,250,000 barrels in 1910; Michigan, 2,000,000 barrels, against 1,200,000, and Maine, 1,350,000 against 900,000 in 1910. Taking New England as a whole, the production will aggregate 3,150,000 barrels, against 2,850,000 in 1910. In the Middle States the yield is 14,000,000 barrels, against 8,750,000 a year ago, while in the Central West the yield is 2,950,000 barrels, compared with 1,775,000 in 1910. A general improvement over a year ago is shown throughout the Central West, in the middle and northwest sections and in New England. Colorado has a good crop, but further west and northwest there is no material improvement over last year; while in the Middle South, where earlier maturing prevented gains through autumn rains, the yield is only fair, but includes many choice apples for local markets, particularly in such important states as the Virginias.—Bradstreet's.

WOMEN MAY AVOID OPERATIONS

By taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

The following letter from Mrs. Orville Rock will prove how unwise it is for women to submit to the dangers of a surgical operation when it may be avoided by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She was four weeks in the hospital and came home suffering worse than before.

Here is her own statement.

Paw Paw, Mich.—"Two years ago I suffered very severely with a displacement. I could not be on my feet for a long time. My physician treated me for seven months without much relief and at last sent me to Ann Arbor for an operation. I was there four weeks and came home suffering worse than before. My mother advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I did. Today I am well and strong and do all my own housework. I owe my health to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and advise my friends who are afflicted with any female complaint to try it."—Mrs. ORVILLE ROCK, R. R. No. 5, Paw Paw, Michigan.

[IRON] AND THE EFFECT IT HAS IN PROCESS.

In Many Cases an Immense Amount of Trouble is Caused By It.

What would you consider one of the most powerful agents with which to flavor water? Would it be iron?

A half part per million of iron in water is detectable by taste and more than 4 or 5 parts make a water unpalatable. In some mineral springs iron is the constituent which imparts a medicinal value to the water, but ordinarily it is undesirable. More than 2.5 parts per million in water used for laundering makes a stain on clothes. Iron must be removed from water from which ice is made or a cloudy, discolored product will result. An iron content of over 2 or 3 parts per million in water used in the manufacture of paper will stain the paper. Iron is harmful in water used for steaming, for it is in equilibrium with acids which inside the boiler become dissociated, with the result that the free acids corrode the boiler plates; but the amount of iron carried in solution by most waters is so small that the damage it does to steam boilers generally amounts to little.

Waters having high iron content have in some places caused an immense amount of trouble and expense when used as city supplies, for they favor the growth of Crenothrix to such a degree that the water pipes become clogged with the iron sheaths of the organism. The removal of iron from water is sometimes easy and sometimes very difficult.—Water Supply Paper, Geological Survey.

That Crowd Stayed.

Senator Swanson of Virginia tells a good story on himself about the first political speech he ever made. He says:

"I jumped up and began: 'Gentlemen, Herodotus tells us——' 'Which ticket's he on?' yelled the man with the red shirt. 'Herodotus tells us,' I resumed, with a gulp, 'of a whole army that was put to flight by the braying of an ass.'

"Then the crowd applauded and I felt fine. Then the man's voice rose above the din. 'Young feller', he called, 'you needn't be afraid of this crowd. It's been tested.'"—Buffalp Commercial.

One day Mark Twain was being shaved by a very talkative barber and was forced to listen to many of his anecdotes.

Some Undertaking.

The official undertaker of a small Michigan town was driving through the county on one of his regular missions. A woman came out to the gate of a farm yard and hailed him.

An aged colored man was engaged in burning grass off the lawn of a young broker when the latter returned to his home and, thinking to have some fun with the old man, said:

Didn't Need It.

It was the anniversary of his young son's birthday, and the proud father, who felt that he ought to give the lad something, stepped into a bookseller's shop.

"What kind of a book would you like, sir?" asked the assistant, to whom the other had confided his purpose.

"Something that would be useful and educative," said the father, forgetting that he always detested such books in his own boyhood.

"Well, here is a very excellent one on 'Self-Help.'"

"Self-Help!" exclaimed the father. "Ben don't need anything of that kind. You ought to see him at the dinner table."

MESSAGE TO THE BOYS OF CALIFORNIA

From EDWARD HYATT, Superintendent of Public Instruction

BOYS, there are such a lot of you that I don't get to write to you very often. I think this is very important to you, else I would surely not take the trouble to write it.

The fun and pleasure and success of your whole life and that of your friends and relatives, are going to depend very largely upon what you do during the next ten years; and I am writing this to ask each particular one of you to stiffen up his will, to make up his mind, to hang to it like grim death, in resolving to get along without cigarettes for ten years to come. No one can do this for you. If you haven't the will to do it yourself, it won't be done.

Believe me, you have a long and tough old fight ahead of you, to keep your head above water and take care of yourself and make a living for fifty years and more in the fierce competition and strife of the world. All the time you'll keenly need every ounce of strength and steadiness and wind that you can summon to your aid.

But here. If you take on the habit of smoking before you are grown, you weaken your strength and steadiness and wind. The other fellow will get away with you and you will go down to humiliating defeat many a time for that reason—simply because in boyhood you drugged yourself so that you are not so tough and strong in body nor so cool and steady in mind as you would otherwise have been.

I say this knowing that cigarettes are gay and stylish—for many stylish things will injure and weaken us; say it knowing that you will see some handsome, well-dressed, striking fellows gracefully smoking them—but still more so the bedraggled bums and hard-faced criminals; say it knowing that you are anxious to be a man and that perhaps the very man you would most like to be is himself a smoker—but if you go with me to the reformatories and prisons you will see thousands of miserable and unfortunate fellows you would not like to be—they, too, are smokers; and their smoking helped to drag them down.

It is not enough to see that a good many admirable boys and men are smoking, without apparent damage in any way. We should use our brains to think with instead of merely as filling for our heads. If we look about and think, we will see that the boys who use cigarettes are most likely to be poor specimens of humanity, thin-faced, nervous, impatient, unable to study or stick to a job. We will see that athletic managers do not want them, that business men would rather have some one else, that they are undesirable to practical employers. They have a poor chance among the strongest and best people everywhere. So it will always be with them.

This is why I ask the boys of this State to do without cigarettes for the next ten years. It would be a great thing for every one of you, and a great thing for the strength and power of the State. How strong is your will? Can you do it?

For a final scrap to linger in your future memory, let me repeat what seem to me the most affecting words I have ever seen on paper, written by one of the wisest citizens our State has ever had:

"Your first duty in life is toward your afterself. So live that your afterself—the man you ought to be—may in his time be possible and actual.

"Far away in the years he is waiting his turn. His body, his brain, his soul, are in your boyish hands. He can not help himself.

"What will you leave for him?

"Will it be a brain unspoiled by lust or dissipation, a mind trained to think and act, a nervous system true as a dial in its response to the truth about you? Will you, Boy, let him come as a man among men in his time? Or will you throw away his inheritance before he has had the chance to touch it? Will you turn over to him a brain distorted, a mind diseased? A will untrained to action? A spinal cord grown through and through with the devil grass of that vile harvest we call wild oats?

"Will you let him come, taking your place, gaining through your experiences, hallowed through your joys, building on them his own?

"Or will you fling his Hope away, decreeing wanton-like that the man you might have been shall never be?

"This is your problem in life; the problem of more importance to you than any or all others. How will you meet it, as a man, or as a fool?

"When you answer this, we shall know what use the world can make of you."

Aim to Make Country Life More Attractive

Farmers' Union Wants Vocational Training Taught in Public Schools Declare That Radical Changes Are Needed in the State School System

Holding to the view that vocational training should be taught in the public schools of the State, a resolution was adopted at the State Convention of the Farmers' Educational and Co-operative Union of America held in Modesto November 14-16 favoring radical changes in the State school system and making provision for the teaching in the grades of elementary agriculture, home economics and a limited amount of manual training, beginning with the seventh grade and extending through the eighth grade, and, if necessary, adding the ninth and tenth grades. The resolution was introduced by L. Woodard of Campbell and Seivert H. Shelley of San Jose, and reads as follows:

"Whereas, It is generally conceded by those who have given the matter any serious consideration that there is a great lack of anything along the lines of vocational training in the system of our common school education, and the further fact that at least 90 per cent of those who enter the schools never get farther than the eighth grade makes it absolutely necessary that radical changes be made, that this great mass of the coming citizens of the country be reached and benefited, as those who are especially interested in the welfare and success of agricultural and horticultural pursuits it behooves us to take the initiative in this matter along lines that will make farm and country life more attractive and profitable; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention that elementary agriculture, home economics and a limited amount of manual training be taught in the grades, where practical, commencing with the seventh grade and extending through the eighth, and, if necessary, adding the ninth and tenth grades to the present system.

"Resolved, Further, that it is the opinion of this convention that there should be a State Commission of Industrial Education, and that the Committee on Legislation be instructed to prepare a bill and have the same introduced at the next regular session of the Legislature along the lines of Senate Bill No. 411, known as the Weinstock bill, and introduced by Senator Strobridge at the last session of the Legislature.

"Resolved, Further, that we pledge ourselves individually and collectively, through the State organization, the county organizations and the locals at home, to work together for the accomplishment of this end.

"Resolved, Further, that we extend an earnest invitation to the Patrons of Husbandry to co-operate with us, as being equally interested in bringing about this great work.

"(Signed)
"L. WOODARD,
"HOMER A. CRAIG,
"SEIVERT H. SHELLEY."

Undesirable Immigration Opposed

Another resolution adopted calls for the enactment of legislation against undesirable immigration, such as Asiatic coolies and the pauper and criminal element from Europe, with which it is feared California will be flooded upon the completion of the Panama Canal. The executive heads of the Union were urged to continue their efforts along these lines.—San Jose Mercury.

GYPSUM
Makes Larger and Finer Crops . . .

Changes heavy clay and adobe soil to lighter soil, similar to loam.
Liberates potash so plants and trees can take it up.
Helps other fertilizers to do their work better, and supplies lime and sulphur.
Gypsum is especially valuable for orchards, enabling water and air to go down further into the soil. This means healthier trees, finer fruit, and larger crops.
Send for descriptive circular.
